The world's largest asset manager BlackRock has hired Milbank in New York and Carey in Santiago to acquire multiple solar plants in the Andean country for US$200 million in total.

BlackRock bought the assets across two deals, both of which were made public on 26 January.

In the first transaction, Milbank and Carey helped BlackRock buy 18 solar plants from a Chilean investment fund.

Local group AD Capital, which acted as the manager of the seller – Tralka Energías Renovables – turned to Prieto.

Tralka operates the largest solar portfolio under a distributed generation Pequeños Medios de Generación Distribuida (PMGD) regime in Chile, with 18 projects totalling 80 megawatts. Created in 2005, the PMGD framework remunerates projects based on the amount of green electricity generated, incentivising other renewable groups to join the scheme.

The purchased assets are in central Chile, where there is the largest demand for residential and industrial electricity.

Concurrently, BlackRock enlisted the same teams from Milbank and Carey to acquire 28 solar projects with a combined capacity of 200 megawatts from Czech solar plant developer Solek.

The seller hired Guerrero Olivos.

Solek develops, owns and manages solar power plants in Europe and Latin America. In March, the group obtained a US$95 million loan to fund its Chilean renewables projects.

As part of the transactions, BlackRock entered into a platform management services agreement with Canada's Aediles Capital, which will manage BlackRock's portfolio of assets in Chile on behalf of the company.
